A Visit to Sanskriti Museum

Situated in the midst of lush green environs, is the Sanskriti Museum in Anandgram. This museum has three sections:

a) Museum of Terracotta

b) Museum of Textile and

c) Museum of everyday art

Our enthusiastic lot of KG's got an opportunity to visit this serene place on the 26th and 27th of July 2017.

Their joy was evident during the bus journey to the place; while many of them identified the metro station, cows and other things en route, others were busy chatting with their friends.

A huge banyan tree stood at the entrance of the museum with its branches spread like arms, waiting to hug each one of us.

Children waited in anticipation and were escorted by a Guide to the first museum, The Museum of Terracotta.

Beautiful artifacts from across the country were displayed. The children's curiosity grew when they saw several earthen pots, horses, elephants and other figurines.

Some of them even identified a potter's wheel "is par mitti ki cheezein banti hai aur ek stick bhi hoti hai "

Children appreciated the colorful Madhubani paintings and were filled with awe.

Thereafter children moved to the Museum of Textile. Children keenly observed the distinctive patterns in phulkari, banarasi and other embroideries from the world, all displayed in the textile section.

They were excited to see the animal motifs and the fabrics hanging from the ceiling that caught their attention.

"maam vo dekho upar bhi kapde lage hain "

Finally our children settled down to enjoy the delicious goodies they had carried. They played for a while in the open spaces that the Museum offered.

It was an enriching experience for our children to be guided through the tour. It helped us to understand the significance of the artifacts displayed there. Before leaving we thanked the museum staff for their kind help and support. After all they were the ones who made sure that our children went away with fond memories of this beautiful place.
